COME, my friend,
and in the silence
and the shadow wrapt apart,
I will loose the golden claspings of this sacred tomb—the heart.

By the bole of yonder cedar, under branches
spread like eaves,

We will sit where wavering sunshine weaves romance among the leaves.

There by gentle airs of story shall our dreamy minds be swayed,

And our spirits hang vibrating like the sunshine with the shade.

Thou shalt sit, and leaning o'er me, calmly look into my heart,

Look as Fiesolé above us looketh on Val d'Arno's mart:—

Shalt behold how

Love's fair river

down the golden city goes,

As the silent stream of Arno through the streets of Florence flows.

I was standing o'er the marble, in the twilight
falling gray,
All my hopes and all my courage waning from me like the day:

There I leaned across the statue, heaving many a sigh and groan,
For I deemed the world as heartless, aye, as heartless as the stone!

Nay, I wellnigh thought the marble was a portion of my pain,
For it seemed a frozen sorrow just without my burning brain.

Then a cold and deathlike stupor slowly crept along my frame,
While my life seemed passing outward, like a pale reluctant flame.

And my weary soul went from me, and it walked the world alone,

O'er a wide and brazen desert, in a hot and brazen zone:

There it walked and trailed its pinions, slowly trailed them in the sands,
With its hopeless eyes fixed blindly, with its hopeless folded hands.

And there came no morn,—no evening with its gentle stars and moon,
But the sun amid the heavens made a broad unbroken noon.

And anon far reaching westward, with its weight of burning air, Lay an old and desolate ocean with a dead and glassy stare.

There my spirit wandered gazing, for the goal
no time might reach,

With its weary feet unsandalled on the hard and heated beach.

This it is to feel uncared for, like a useless
wayside stone,

This it is to walk in spirit through the desolate world alone!

Still I leaned across the marble, and a hand was on my arm,

And my soul came back unto me as 'twere
summoned by a charm :

While a voice in gentlest whisper, breathed my name into my ear,

“ Ah, Andrea, why this silence, why this shadow and this tear ? ”

Then I felt that I had wronged her, though I knew it not before ;

I had feared that she would scorn me if I told the love I bore.

I had seen her, spoken to her, only twice or thrice perchance;

And her mien was fine and stately, and all heaven was in her glance.

She had praised my humble labors, the conception and the art,—

She had said a thing of beauty nestled ever to her heart.

And I thought one pleasant morning when our eyes together met,

That her orbs in dewy splendor dropt beneath their fringe of jet.

Though her form and air were noble, yet a simple dress she wore, Like yon maiden by the cypress, which the vines are weeping o'er.

And she came all unattended,— her protection
in her mien;
And with somewhat of reluctance bade me
call her name Christine.

Then that name became a music, and my dreams went to the time,

And my brain all day made verses, and her beauty filled the rhyme.

Never dreamed I that she loved me, but I felt it now the more;

For her hand was laid upon me, and her eyes were brimming o'er.

Oh, she looked into my spirit, as the stars look in the stream,

Or as azure eyes of angels calm the trouble of a dream.

Then I told my love unto her, and her sighs came deep and long—

So you peasant plays the measure, while the other leads the song.

Then with tender words we parted, only as true lovers can;

I for that deep love she bore me was a braver, better man.

I had lived unloved of any, only loving Art before;

Now I thought all things did love me, and I loved all things the more.

I had lived accursed of Fortune, lived in penury worse than pain ;

But, when all the heaven was blackest, down it showered in golden rain.

I was summoned to the palace, to the presence of the Duke,

Feeling hopes arise within me that no grandeur could rebuke.

Down he kindly came to meet me, but I thought the golden throne

Upon which my love had raised me, was not lower than his own.

Then he grasped my hand with fervor, and I gave as warm return,
For I felt a noble nature in my very fingers burn.

And I would not bow below him, if I could not rise above,
For I felt within my bosom all the majesty of Love.

“Sir,” said he, “your fame has reached me, and I fain would test your skill—
Carve me something, Signior; follow the free fancy of your will.

Carve me something—an Apollo, or a Dian
with her hounds;
Or Adonis, dying,
watching the young life flow from his wounds; —

Or a dreamy-lidded Psyché, with her Cupid on her knee;

Or a flying fretted Daphne, taking refuge in the tree.

But I will not dictate, Signior; I can trust your taste and skill—

In the ancient armored chamber you may carve me what you will.”

Then I thanked him as he left me—and I walked the armored hall—

Even I, so late neglected, walked within the palace wall.

There were many suits of armor, some with battered breasts and casques;

And I thought the ancestral phantoms smiled upon me from their masks.

And my footsteps were elastic with an energy divine—

Never in those breasts of iron beat a heart as proud as mine!

There for days I walked the chamber with a spirit all inflamed,

And I thought on all the subjects which the generous Duke had named—

Thought of those, and thought of others, slowly thought them o'er and o'er, Till my stormy brain went throbbing like the surf along the shore.

In despair I left the palace, sought my humble room again,
And my gentle Christine met me, and she smiled away my pain.

“Courage!” said she, and my courage leapt
within me as she spake,
And my soul was sworn to trial and to triumph for her sake.

Who shall say that love is idle, or a weight upon the mind?

Friend! the soul that dares to scorn it, hath in idle dust reclined.

I returned, and in the chamber piled the shape-less Adam-earth;

Piled it carelessly, not knowing to what form it might give birth.

There I leaned, and dreamed, above it, till the day went down the west,

And the darkness came unto me like an old familiar guest.

But I started, for a rustle swept athwart the solemn gloom!

And with light, like morn's horizon, gleamed
the far end of the room!

Then a heavy sea of curtain, in a tempest rolled away!

Blessed Virgin! how I trembled! but it was not with dismay.

And my eyes grew large and larger, as I looked with lips apart;

And my senses drank in beauty, till it drowned my happy heart.

There it stood, a living statue! with its loosened locks of brown—

In an attitude angelic, with the folded hands dropt down.

But I could not see the features, for a veil was hanging there,

Yet so thin, that o'er the forehead I could trace the shadowy hair.

Then the veil became a trouble, and I wished that it were gone,

And I spake, 't was but a whisper, "Let thy features on me-dawn!"

And the heavy sea of drapery stormed again
across my sight,
Leaving me appalled with wonder, breathless in the sudden night.

But for days, where'er I turned me, still that blessed form was there,
As one looketh to the sunlight, then beholds it everywhere.

And for days and days I labored, with a soul
in courage mailed;
And I wrought the nameless statue; but, alas!
the face was veiled.

I had tried all forms of feature—every face of classic art—
Still the veil was there—I felt it—in my brain, and in my heart!

Sorrowing,

palace, and again I met Christine,

And she trembled as I told her of the vision

I had seen.

And she sighed, "Ah, dear Andrea," while she clung unto my breast,

"What if this should prove a phantom, something fearful and unblest—

Something which shall pass between us?" and she clasped me with her arm;

"Nay," I answered, "love, I'll test it with a most angelic charm.

Let me gaze upon thy features, love, and fear not for the rest;

They shall exorcise the spirit if it be a thing unblest!"

Then I hurried to the statue, where so often I had failed,

And I made the face of Christine, and it stood no longer veiled!

With a flush upon my forehead, then I called the Duke—he came,

And in rustling silks beside him walked his tall
and stately dame;

And they looked upon the statue—then on me
with stern surprise;

Then they looked upon each other with a wonder in their eyes!

“What is this?” spake out the Duchess, with her gaze fixed on the Duke;

“What is this?” and me he questioned in a tone of sharp rebuke.

Like a miserable echo, I the question asked again—

And he said, “It is our daughter! your presumption for your pain!”

But asudden from the curtain, in her jewelled
dress complete,

Swept a maiden in her beauty, and she dropped before his feet—

And she cried, "O! father—mother, cast aside
that frowning mien;

And forgive my own Andrea, and forgive your child Christine!

O! forgive us: for, believe me, all the fault was mine alone!"

And they granted her petition, and they blessed us as their own.
